

Analysis of the bug

The `p` command of the `child()` function, while reading the value of the key, doesn't account for the `:` character already put into the `key` buffer. The last byte of the key will thus overwrite the least significant byte of the `value` pointer.